An old lady called in an optometrist to treat her eyesight. The optometrist examined her and told her that she should regain her eyesight provided she paid him a hefty fee. The old lady consented to pay the desired amount. The doctor advised her to keep her eyes shut and avoid dazzling light during day hours. The old lady followed the advice of the optometrist and kept her eyes closed during the day time.

But the optometrist wasn't so honest; he took advantage of the situation and began taking away costly household things from her house.

Later, when the treatment was over, the optometrist asked for his fees; but the old lady refused. So the matter was taken to the court of law.

"Who says this optometrist has improved my eyesight", said the old lady in the court. "Before I started getting treatment from him, I could see everything in my house; but now I can't see any of those".
